

FACULTY OF ARTS

RHETORIC AND COMMUNICATIONS

This program offers studies in the theory, analysis, and practice of a variety of communications: written, oral, visual, and digital.

Majoring in Rhetoric and Communications will help you become a highly adaptable communicator with superb hands-on skills in drafting, revising, and editing. You will also acquire the theoretical and analytical background to prepare, adapt, interpret, and evaluate messages intended for a wide range of audiences and purposes. In short, Rhetoric and Communications will help you become a “reflective practitioner” - a discerning critic and crafter of language.

This program leads to a Bachelor of Arts degree (3-year, 4-year, or Honours).

NOTE: The BA Honours in Rhetoric is a new offering, starting in 2019-20.

Students taking an undergraduate degree in another Major may choose to add a Minor in Rhetoric and Communications as a secondary area of interest.

SAMPLE CAREERS

Graduates have developed abilities that are valued in a wide range of careers. They may become fundraising consultants, public affairs officers, media coordinators, publicity agents, museum or gallery educators, technical or scientific writers, copywriters, or copy editors. They may also pursue careers in government and politics (for example, as a speech writer, researcher, or press secretary), health (communications officer), and business (public information officer).

SAMPLE COURSES

Professional Style & Editing teaches students to write in several prose styles and to edit work professionally in terms of stylistic (rather than only grammatical) criteria. The course will benefit anyone intending to write polished term papers or theses, not to mention business reports or public service announcements.

Rhetorical Criticism examines advertising copy, political speeches, editorials, newspaper reports, popular essays, and a range of other rhetorical artefacts, to determine how such uses of language persuade audiences and to discover what they reveal about cultural values and social trends.

Rhetorics of Visual Representation seeks to improve students' visual literacy, as we move from a primarily verbal culture to an increasingly visual one. This course explores such urgent topics as visual truth and argument, the interaction between word and image, the circulation and transformation of images in the public sphere, and strategies of visual disruption and dissent.

“My training in Rhetoric and Communications helped me learn quickly how to read and write in law school. I knew how to cut to what’s important - a crucial skill when your assigned reading for the week is more than you can physically carry. I would definitely recommend the Major to those thinking of pursuing law.”

- Paul Klippenstein (BA), who went on to study Law at McGill University in Montreal
